

the Exodus 1220 breaks the rules

After the success of the 10.6m comes the new Exodus 1220

THE BIG SISTER TO THE 10.6 gives greater payload, room and comfort for the more serious coastal cruiser or the blue water adventurer. Built from the choice of western red cedar or duracore hulls below waterline and ATL Composite duflex epoxy composite panels above waterline, giving the vessel strength, but ensuring the lightweight requirements of a catamaran. Many boat owners now require a good passage making vessel but also like to take the creature comforts of home. Up to now not many designs could do both. The 10.6m model proved she could take a family of four half way around Australia and back fully loaded and still make good passage safely. Tonic the first 10.6 built in Australia has sailed from south-east Queensland to Shark Bay in WA and back around the top end and down to Sydney.

The Exodus 1220 comes in at only 6000kg and is capable of a 1800kg payload without compromising performance and with her space aged design, looks the part. Streamline Catamarans are building their second Exodus and have another on order in survey for charter. These catamarans are available from painted shell through to completed vessel. All models have dagger boards which are required or good windward sailing and come with the option of protective keels for the sail drive leg or full sit on the beach keels to make for safe beaching when required.

Custom designed interiors

The interior is up to the owner (subject to designer approval) and can be custom fitted out from basic to luxury. The current 1220 under construction has an upstairs galley and saloon area incorporating the nav station and two queen berths forward each with head and shower. Two aft double cabins and plenty of storage.

If a large toilet and separate shower area is required, one of the aft cabins could be fitted out as a bathroom. The cockpit is designed like a sunken lounge giving great protection from the elements and an ideal entertaining area. The aft targa doubles as a davit and solar panel platform.

New 1220 model delivers performance, more room..

The new 1220 has comfort, extremely modern styling, plus fast safe passage making capabilities. We believe the designers at Exodus have developed one of the best cruising catamarans available in the world today. Specifically designed for extended coastal and blue water sailing the 1220 has large payload capabilities, allowing those extra creature home comforts & built from epoxy composite materials for greater security.

Equipt with dagger boards for upwind sailing, boasting a 17m+ mast and only 6000KG this cat can "scamper". The added safety of mini keels allows for easy beaching and protection of the props. The 1220 and the 10.6 models are available from painted shell to sail away. Customised interior layout to suit each client is included in the package

If you are considering serious cruising or just want to live aboard, the Exodus 1220 has a lot to offer combined with the added safety and extended life of epoxy based materials in the construction and locally built in Australia. Contact us today!
